

Personal Work & Personal Life

Highlights from Mito Church Life & My Life 'Outside of Work'

Mito Church has really stepped up in faith and in action in their response to the disaster. At the same time, I also can see that the flock is tired, and many are struggling physically, emotionally and spiritually. A renewed effort to focus and gather to worship God, and finding small ways to have meaningful connections and communication are prayers Atsushi and I are putting into action. Our young adult cell group has been inviting older members to share their life and faith experiences with us once a month, and that has been really positive as well. Daily discipleship requires love, wisdom, and patience. I am being stretched.

Healthwise, the doctor took me off two of the medications I've been on and though I don't see the progress I want, I feel like I am making small steps. I am ready to have a little more balance in all aspects of life and work. Thank you for your prayers!

The Status Of My Future Support

I am now just four months away from when I will be without an American sponsor. I have not found a church or individuals to cover the additional US$400/month I will be lacking as of January 2012. I say 'additional' because I have already lost support, have no working fund, and feel the deep cut of the loss through exchange. If you can help contribute, know of a church or can help introduce me to others, I would really appreciate it. May God continue to work through our partnership. Blessings!
